How is your town different?

Hey guys. In this video I'm going to talk about my two homes and how they're very different.

So I live about half the year in Japan and half the year in Thailand. And my life is different in each place. So in Thailand, I don't cook much. Actually, I don't cook at all because my little apartment does not have a kitchen, so I eat out often. Actually, I eat out all the time in Japan, though. I cook some In Japan. I don't use the bus that much. I have a car, so I drive a lot. But in Thailand, I don't drive at all. I never drive actually. So I either take the bus or I take the BTS. So that's a little bit different. Also in Japan, I don't walk much, don't walk around that much. But in Thailand, I walk around a lot. I walk to the park, I walk down the street. I'm just always walking. So I kind of like that.

In Japan, I speak Japanese, but I don't speak that much. Actually. I don't know why. I guess because people don't talk as much in Japan, and maybe my Japanese is not as good. But in Thailand, I speak Thai a lot, so maybe that's also a little bit different. In Thailand, I don't spend that much money, but Bangkok is getting more expensive. And then where I live in Japan's not too expensive, so I don't spend that much money there, but I spend much more money on rent in Japan than I do in Thailand. So both places are great. I love 'em, but they're just a little bit different.

What is the correct word? Listen to the audio to hear the answer!

Hey guys. In this video I'm going to talk about my two homes/home and how they're very different/difference.

So I live about half the year in Japan and half the year/years in Thailand. And my life is different in each place/places. So in Thailand, I don't cook more/much. Actually, I don't cook at all because my little apartment goes/does not have a kitchen, so I eat out often. Actually, I eat out/over all the time in Japan, though. I cook sometimes in/at Japan. I don't use the bus that much. I have a car, so I drive a lot/let. But in Thailand, I don't drive at all. I ever/never drive actually. So I either take/make the bus or I take the BTS. So that's a little bit different. Also in Japan, I don't work/walk much, don't walk around that much. But in Thailand, I walk around a lot. I walk to the park, I walk down the street/straight. I'm just always walking. So I kind of like that.

In Japan, I speak Japanese, but I don't speak that me/much. Actually. I don't know why. I guess because people don't talk as much in/on Japan, and maybe my Japanese is now/not as good. But in Thailand, I speak Thai a lot, so maybe that's also a little bit different. In Thailand, I don't spent/spend that much money, but Bangkok is getting more expensive. And then where/who I live in Japan's not too expensive, so I don't spend that much money there/their, but I spend much more money on rent in Japan than I do in Thailand. So both places or/are great. I love 'em, but they're just a little bit/but different.
